'Winnie's New Computer' by Valerie Thomas and Korky Paul

She clicked the mouse and Wilbur was a black cat again. An angry wet, black cat.

"Well Wilbur," said Winnie, "I won't need my book of spells or my magic wand anymore." And she put them away for the dustman to take away.

That night, Wilbur waited until he could hear Winnie snoring. Then he crept downstairs. He was going to see that mouse. He patted it. Nothing happened.

"Meeow, grrrrrssss!" he snarled. He grabbed the mouse, tossed it into the air, and rolled onto his back.

ZAP! The computer came on.

ZAP! Wilbur turned bright blue.

ZAP! ZAP! ZAP!

Winnie had a lovely sleep. In the morning she came downstairs for her breakfast.

"Breakfast, Wilbur," she called.

"Where are you Wilbur?" She looked in the garden, in the bathroom, in all the cupboards. No Wilbur. Then she looked in the computer room...

"OH NO!!!" cried Winnie. "Wilbur where are you? And where's the computer?"

She reached into the cupboard for her book of spells. She put her hand in her pocket for her magic wand. Then she remembered. She ran to the window. The dustman was tipping her rubbish into his truck.

"Stop!" shouted Winnie. "STOP!" But it was too late. The dustman couldn't hear her. He jumped into his truck and drove away.

"What shall I do?" cried Winnie.
