WALT section a story into paragraphs

Success Criteria

- recognise that when the subject matter in the story changes it is a new paragraph (section)
- to find noun phrases

Task 1

You need to decide where I would separate the parts of my story into paragraphs. Put a star where you think the different paragraphs (sections) would be.

Sarah's Sock

Sarah has a sock. A pink, stripy sock. It is not any old sock. It is much more than a sock. Sarah is waiting to get on the train in West Norwood with her family to take a trip to the woods. Sarah has had her special, soft sock for a long time. This sock is a place to keep her special sweets. Her long sticky jelly snakes and her red, chewy cherry sweets. Then she can keep them in her pocket and take them out whenever she needs one. The cosy, warm sock is a sleeping bag for her toy teddy. At night time the little, yellow teddy snuggles in the sock to keep him warm throughout the long, dark night. Sarah loves her sock and has tried out several names like softy, cuddly and sticky but her favourite name for it is socky. This sock is a snake. A hissing, wiggling snake that loves scaring her little sister. It pops out from under her bed and jumps on her sister's bed making her jump and scream. When Sarah got to the forest the sock became a flag for a stick and she used it to wave in the air while playing a game of hide and seek in the woods but then it got stuck in the brambles. Sarah couldn't reach it and it blew into the river. Sarah was sad but she thought to herself perhaps it will be a toy for the smooth, brown otters that live in the river. She turned and saw a round, grey rock and picked it up. This rock is a dragon egg that belongs to the oldest dragon in the forest...
